

Increasing Number of Women Participating in Adventure Travel Highlights the Usefulness of Van Rentals, says Van Rental Center

The Los Angeles-based rental agency comments on a recent article that many an outdoor camping or road trip can be improved by renting a first-rate van.

Los Angeles, CA (PRWEB) March 20, 2017 -- A March 8 article on Condé Nast Traveler describes a trend towards more women embarking on adventurous vacations, often on their own and arguably in greater numbers than men. Van Rental Center notes that they are noting this trend among some of their female customers, who are taking advantage of van rentals as a logical way to take a road trip and enjoy the natural beauty and possibilities for adventure in the great state of California. They note that renting a van has a number of advantages for female and male campers, hikers, and other adventurers over a standard automobile. These include:

More Room for a Large Group. Van Rental Center notes that, while an increasing number of women are going it alone or with just one or two friends, many prefer going with a large group of friends or family members. Whether it's a minivan or a larger passenger van seating as many as 15 individuals, a Ford, Chevrolet, Dodge, or Toyota van can provide a great deal of comfort for a large group of folks of either or both genders. Whether it's a church or social group, the right size van can make all the difference in an outdoor road trip, says Van Rental Center.

More Room for Stuff. Adventuresome activities typically require more than their share of equipment, says Van Rental Center. From tents and backpacks to coolers, to crucial equipment for camping, rock climbing, snorkeling, or other outdoor fun, a good amount of room may be required to store everyone's gear. For a single or pair of travelers, a cargo van might be a good choice, while a minivan is good for a smaller family or group, says the rental agency. In some cases with very large groups, it might even make sense to rent two vans, one primarily for stuff, one mostly to transport people, says Van Rental Center.

A Great Vehicle to Drive. Van Rental Center notes that, apart from being both roomy and comfortable, today's best vans are simply a pleasure to drive. The agency notes that going up steep mountain roads, in particular, can be a nerve wracking experience if a vehicle isn't fully up to the task. They add that their team is here to help customer select just the right vehicle for the adventure trip they have in mind.

Van Rental Center concludes by saying that, whether California travelers are heading to the desert, sea, or mountains, their entire team is ready to provide customers with all the information they need to make the best possible selection.
