

Advances in the Trucking Industry are discussed on "Behind The Scenes" with James Earl Jones for Public Television

A new segment for the popular series discusses trucking in detail.

(PRWEB) January 08, 2016 -- "Behind The Scenes", with host James Earl Jones (star of dozens of Hollywood feature films and Broadway productions in his career), have announced that the popular program will cover the topic of advances in the trucking industry in an upcoming episode. The trucking industry has been on the forefront of technology in recent years, implementing a wide range of different advancements that have completely revolutionized supply chain management in the United States for the better.

Many advancements in the trucking industry have had to do with an attempt to keep the roads safer for both truckers and pedestrians alike. Trucks are now outfitted with GPS systems, helping managers keep an eye on where their products are and whether or not the truckers themselves are maintaining safe driving practices. With advanced inventory control techniques, it is not easier than ever to monitor the movement of important stock as it makes its way across the country.

"Behind The Scenes" is distributed to Public Television Stations in most major markets around the United States - check the show's site for additional information. As the program was designed from the beginning to be a completely independent production, it is not affiliated with PBS or APT in any way.
