Scottsdale, Arizona (PRWEB) December 31, 2015 -- Veteran Scottsdale DUI attorney and founder of Corso Law Group, Christopher Corso, says Valley residents will be under extra scrutiny during Arizona's DUI crackdown this New Year's Eve and New Year's Day.

Police are increasing saturation patrols in Phoenix, the East Valley and the West Valley throughout the holiday weekend and New Year's Day, according to a statement by the Governor's Office of Highway Safety.

The program is tasked with lowering the number of intoxicated drivers on the road with patrols and traffic stops that resulted in 14,079 sober, designated drivers contacted to escort impaired drivers home in 2014.

Corso says Valley residents can expect to see DUI patrols and stops in the days leading up to New Year's Eve and New Year's Day.

"Law enforcement officials are well aware that New Year's Eve ranks as one of the deadliest holidays, and they're taking action," Corso said. "Police will be on high-alert for drunk drivers and won't hesitate to give out citations or make arrests for traffic violations."

In recent years, Arizona officials have steadily increased their numbers during New Year's Eve and New Year's Day, sending a message to the public that drunk driving will not be tolerated during the holidays, when approximately 42 percent of traffic fatalities are related to drinking and driving, according to the National Safety Council.

Roads are particularly dangerous after midnight toasts and during the early hours of New Year's Day, the day of the year with the highest percent of alcohol-related deaths. On New Year's Day, the percentage of deaths involving a car accident increases by 51 percent.

"If New Year's Eve festivities end in legal trouble, Valley residents can count on Corso Law Group to provide the defense they need," Corso said.
