

The San Francisco Labor Law Lawyers At Blumenthal Nordrehaug & Bhowmik File A Class Action Against Pride Transport, Inc. Alleging Unpaid Wages For Their Truck Drivers

Golden State truck drivers working for Pride Transport, Inc. allege in the recently filed class action that the trucking company based in Utah failed to pay them for their non-driving activities and allegedly failed to provide proper meal breaks and paid rest periods

San Francisco, California (PRWEB) June 13, 2016 -- The San Francisco employment law attorneys at Blumenthal, Nordrehaug & Bhowmik filed a truck driver class action lawsuit against Pride Transport, Inc. alleging that the transportation company failed to correctly pay their California truck drivers for all their non-driving time, including time spent working when they were not driving the company's trucks. The Pride Transport truck driver wage class action is currently pending in the Santa Cruz County Superior Court, Case No. 16CV01337. To read a copy of the Complaint, please click here.

The wage class action filed against Pride Transport, Inc. by the San Francisco employment law attorneys at Blumenthal, Nordrehaug & Bhowmik claims that trucking company allegedly failed to have a company wide policy that gave their Golden State truck drivers full off-duty thirty minute uninterrupted meal periods in accordance with California law. The Pride Transport truck driver class action claims that the failure to provide thirty minute meal breaks is allegedly evidenced by Pride Transport's business records.

The class action lawsuit also claims that Pride Transport truck drivers were allegedly paid on a piece-rate basis. The class action claims that the truck drivers were allegedly not paid all minimum wages because the Complaint claims the drivers were only paid while driving. The class action claims that the truck drivers should have been paid minimum wages for their non-driving tasks.
