The lawsuit filed against Old Dominion Freight Line by the San Diego labor law attorneys at Blumenthal, Nordrehaug & Bhowmik alleges that trucking giant does not have a policy or practice which provides legally compliant thirty minute uninterrupted meal breaks to their truck drivers in California. The lawsuit asserts that Old Dominion's failure to provide the legally required meal breaks is evidenced by the company's records which contain no evidence of these breaks.

Additionally, the class action complaint alleges that Plaintiff and other truck drivers working for the company in California were paid on a piece-rate basis. The lawsuit claims that the truck drivers were not paid all minimum wages due to them because of Defendant's alleged failure to record all time worked. Specifically, the Complaint claims that the truck drivers should have been paid minimum wages for their non-driving tasks, these tasks included the work performed during pre-trip and post-trip inspections and time spent allegedly waiting for Defendant's loads to be ready for transport.
