

Car Repairs Without Spending A Dime.

CarFixFree.com has launched a web site to let consumers know about vehicle secret warranties. The web service will email technical service bulletins to vehicle owners who qualify.

(PRWEB) May 24, 2003 -- TAMPA, FL - May 23, 2003 -

Laura Naro was told by a mechanic that it would cost at least $1,000 to fix a head gasket in her Dodge Neon.

She was surprised to find out that Chrysler knew about the problem and that it was widespread. So widespread that the company developed a new head gasket for certain models.

Chrysler sent tech service bulletins to dealers about how to fix the problem, but consumers, like Naro, were never notified.

Car owners like Naro are up against what's called a secret warranty. It's a common practice with all automobile manufacturers for all types of repairs. Over 6,000 secret warranties are issued by car makers every year, but they deny they even exist. To get FREE repairs, consumers need information.

CarFixFree.com has launched a web site to let consumers know about these secret warranties. The web service will email technical service bulletins to vehicle owners who qualify. In addition, CarFixFree.com will monitor consumer's vehicles for one year and email them any updates.

Visit www.CarFixFree.com today to see if your vehicle qualifies.

###

Contact Information

Roger Arnell

Carfixfree.com

<http://www.CarFixFree.com>

Online Web 2.0 Version

You can read the online version of this press release here.