

Salvage Transmission Sale Now Active at Used Gearbox Company Website

Salvage transmission sale is now active for buyers online from the used inventory listed at the GotTransmissions.com company. These salvage units are discounted for all U.S. sales.

Lexington, KY (PRWEB) January 07, 2014 -- A growing percentage of North American auto parts buyers are relying on second hand sellers to provide discounts not available through average auto parts stores. The Got Transmissions company is now activating a salvage transmission sale program for second hand transmission buyers online at <http://www.gottransmissions.com/used-transmissions.html>.

These salvage units are currently priced for immediate sale to offer one resource for obtaining discounts online. This new level of pricing is designed to attract salvage company parts buyers, junkyard parts buyers and actual motor vehicle owners seeking replacement gearboxes for sale in the U.S.

The current salvage price list is enabled inside the lookup system for assemblies at the GotTransmissions.com website. This system has been placed on each page of the company website to ensure access is easier for parts buyers online. Inventory from automakers like Toyota, Ford, Chevy, Jeep, Honda and Dodge is included in the salvage pricing.

"There are differences in transmission quality on the secondary market and not every unit that buyers come across online is right for replacement," one source at the GotTransmissions.com company said.

One new strategy announced in the last part of 2013 that is carried over into this new year is the new evaluations of inventory that are made at the Got Transmissions company. A team of company specialists are responsible for grading each assembly for mileage, quality and external condition before these are announced for the company inventory for sale.

"The salvage inventory and price levels that we've designed for this year are meant to match value as well as condition for buyers seeking a good deal for used parts online," the source included.

The Got Transmissions company website is now featuring new pages that are useful for research online. The total count of pages that are now established online is more than 1000. These optional resource pages are now available apart from the intelligent inventory search system used to present pricing and in stock information.
