San Francisco, CA (PRWEB) January 08, 2014 -- The Cobalt produced from the Chevrolet division of the General Motors company took the place of the Chevrolet Cavalier in the U.S. market. The Got Engines company is now helping Cobalt owners to find replacement engines online. This company is adding used 2005 Chevy Cobalt engine inventory for buyers at <http://www.gotengines.com/chevrolet/rebuilt-chevy-engines.html>.

These additions to the GM parts inventory now listed for sale online are designed to improve the four-speed engines inventory now available for retail sale. The Ecotec brand of engines was recently included in the available inventory to enhance the units that buyers can find online. The 2.0 and 2.4 series engines now available for the Cobalt are two new options for 2014.

A price reduction program was announced at the last part of 2013 by the Got Engines company. This pricing remains in effect for a majority of replacement motors in the company inventory shipped inside the U.S. The used Cobalt engines that are now for sale are included in the price program expected to remain in place through the rest of the year.

"The Cobalt was produced by General Motors from 2004 to 2010 is one of the concept vehicles produced to increase vehicle sales in the GM family," said one source at the GotEngines.com company.

The arrival of the 2.4 and 2.2 engines for sale in used condition is one phase of updates now completed to improve the Got Engines inventory. Units for the truck division were recently included in 5.3L size to enhance the V8 builds that buyers can purchase online with GM nameplates.

"The build up of key automaker engines that is now ongoing on our website is specifically designed to enhance customer satisfaction and inventory distribution," the source added.

The Got Engines company has changed its shipping and warranty policies to match the new sale pricing announced in the U.S. All shipping fees have been eliminated for domestic shipments through the remainder of the year. The Cobalt used engines and other units in stock have been upgraded to feature new parts protection warranty plans for every engine buyer.
