A Brand New Approach To Buying Auto Parts Makes It Easy For Anyone To Save Money On Their Car Repair

Raleigh, NC (PRWEB) July 27, 2016 -- LowerEstimate.com has unveiled a new service that aims to help people save money on car repair by making it easy to source the parts themselves.

“Most people don’t realize that you can buy your own parts and bring them to a mechanic,” said LowerEstimate co-founder Sean Fallon.

“We’ll send you the exact parts you need at a fraction of what the mechanic will charge. You don’t need to know anything about cars - just send us your repair estimate and we’ll do the rest.”

LowerEstimate is also offering a free OBDII scanner with a $100 parts purchase.

“We want to empower our customers in the car repair process,” Fallon notes. “The OBDII scanner is part of that - a simple way for the average person to learn more about what’s happening with their vehicle. Our customers also benefit from knowing exactly what parts are going in their vehicle along with the warranties they’re entitled to.”

“LowerEstimate.com is for people that aren’t willing to just accept whatever price the mechanic wants them to pay.”

About LowerEstimate: LowerEstimate (a Fallon Ventures, LLC company) helps people save money by empowering them in the car repair process. This includes sourcing the necessary parts and educating the consumer on exactly what is going into their vehicle. Learn more at:
