

New website for UK learner drivers

A new website has been launched in the UK to help learner drivers with any problems they come across whilst learning to drive.

(PRWEB) March 30, 2004 -- The site $\hat{A} \square$ The UK learn to drive forums $\hat{A} \square$ covers many related subjects and gives learners the chance to talk with other learners, driving instructors and even test examiners.

The site also features a chat room where learners can talk live to each other about driving related topics, and there are regular organised chat sessions featuring representatives from national driving schools and driving related organisations.

There are also sections of the site designed for driving instructors to chat with each other about work related topics, and a special forum for those who are considering becoming a driving instructor as a career option.

The UK learn to drive forum is at http://driving.iseekhere.com

Contact Information Jonathan Sharpe ISEEKHERE.COM http://driving.iseekhere.com 01293 562082

Online Web 2.0 Version You can read the online version of this press release here.