

Increase in adoption of Intelligent Transportation Systems (ITS) in US?

(PRWEB) April 22, 2004 -- Research and Markets announces the addition of this new report entitled "U.S. ITS Market" to its offerings.

The research is intended to present the readers with a clear picture on the current technological and project status of Intelligent Transportation Systems (ITS) in the United States. This report provides several case studies of the largest and most important ITS projects in the US, enabling an understanding of the scope and intensity of the deployment of various hardware components and systems. These project case studies should further show the technical barrier borne by the project authorities, users and system integrators on the project.

This report also includes a selection of company profiles of both ITS hardware component makers and ITS system integrators and designers. The choice of companies is based upon those companies that are getting the most equipment deployed or the system integrators that are working on the largest and most important ITS projects. This list includes companies involved in just maker single components, like CCTV camera systems or Variable Message Signs as well as those companies that are involved in entire complex Commercial Vehicle Operations equipment design and development. Each vendor is summarized by equipment category and alliances within one section of the report.

In order to help visualize the future of the ITS market, the report also presents forecast for the demand of various ITS hardware segmented by equipment type such as CCTV, loop detectors, etc, providing a good picture of the overall size and breadth of the market for ITS equipment, now and over the next several years.
