

InventHelp Inventor Develops Automotive Accessory for African American Motorists and Allies (LCC-3190)

InventHelp is attempting to submit the HANDS HELD HIGH to companies for their consideration.

PITTSBURGH, PA (PRWEB) November 28, 2016 -- "With racial issues repeatedly making headline news, I thought that there needed to be a way to express my concern, frustration and feelings peacefully," said an inventor from New Park, Pa. "I came up with this idea as a statement of declaration of equal rights and respect while working in Baltimore during the initial civil unrest movements."

He developed the HANDS HELD HIGH to show unity among Black motorists. The accessory serves as a statement of declaration of equal rights and respect. It helps raise awareness of racial issues, and it is designed as a conversation piece. The unit adds a decorative, personalized touch to the vehicle. Additionally, the invention is suitable for display in any motor vehicle, desktop or any flat surface. Also, considerations could be made for producing it in keychains, t-shirts and baseball caps.

The original design was submitted to the Lancaster office of InventHelp. It is currently available for licensing or sale to manufacturers or marketers.
