Filling out an online questionnaire may seem simple and straightforward. However, drivers should not be tricked by the simplicity of a form. There is plenty of room for errors that will prevent drivers from getting cheaper car insurance quotes. This blog post highlights the most common mistakes and how to avoid them.

Ignoring discounts is a common mistake. There are a few reasons why this happens. First of all, some people are negligent when filling forms and do not check all options that may give them discounts. Or they are unaware. For example, a questionnaire may ask if the car has ABS. The driver may say it does not have ABS, even though the manufacturer has installed one.

Avoiding to pay the policy in full is another common, and quite costly, mistake. Drivers should, at least, preview how much they can save when paying everything in a single lump sum. Online tools usually inform drivers about this option. Read more on this blog post to find out how much can drivers save on car insurance.

Letting the deductibles set on a default value can also be considered a mistake. Drivers have to set deductibles when choosing coverage. Many websites set deductibles to $500 for both comprehensive and collision coverage. Drivers should be aware that by choosing higher values, they will lower the premiums.
