Everyone knows that car insurance can get pretty expensive and there are many who struggle to pay the monthly premiums. However, car insurance doesn't have to be expensive and there are plenty of methods that can help drivers pay lower insurance rates.

To save money on car insurance, drivers should check the next tips:

- Look for better insurance deals. Car insurance companies are known for changing their insurance rates quite often. Drivers that are no longer satisfied by their premiums, should search for another provider. Brokerage websites can help drivers obtain better deals. It only takes a few moments to go to a brokerage website, complete the online questionnaire, and to compare the results.
- Exclude high-risk drivers from the policy. Policyholders should be careful about who they add and who to declare as the main driver. Policyholders should avoid adding too many inexperienced drivers to their policies. Also, if a teen driver is using the car the most, then he should be declared as the main driver, in order to avoid harsh penalties.
- Join a defensive driving course. Defensive driving programs are cheap and they do not take too long to be completed. Everyone can join these classes, and learn how to stay safe on the roads, new safe driving techniques, and if the traffic laws have changed and how they have changed. Drivers should talk to their insurers and see how much they can save after graduating an approved defensive driving course.
- Install safety devices. There are many aftermarket safety devices to choose from. However, before installing any safety devices, drivers should contact their insurers and check which devices are approved and how much they can save on insurance.
- Raise the deductible. Drivers that own full coverage, can save money by choosing to pay a higher deductible before asking for reimbursement in case of a crash. With the money they save on insurance they should open a savings account that can be used whenever they need to file a claim.
