

Hand-free laws sweeping the nation

Throughout the nation drivers operate in heavy, fast-moving traffic with one hand on the steering wheel and the other trying to handle a cellular phone call. Without the complete obliteration of cell phones and portable communication devices, which we know is quite impossible in this day and age; there is no way of solving this problem entirely. Hands-Free laws are beginning to sweep the nation, such as the one recently enacted in Washington D.C. barring cell phone users from driving and talking at the same time, unless they use an earpiece and microphone or some other form of hands-free technology. The Travel Mount hopes to eliminate the new problem of where to put your device once you are using hands-free technology.

San Diego, CA (PRWEB) July 16, 2004 -- Drivers in Washington D.C. are barred from using hand-held phones, MP3 players, GPS receivers, and PDAs. Getting caught comes with a $100 fine.

Throughout the nation drivers operate in heavy, fast-moving traffic with one hand on the steering wheel and the other trying to handle a cellular phone call. Without the complete obliteration of cell phones and portable communication devices, which we know is quite impossible in this day and age; there is no way of solving this problem entirely.

There are some alternatives though, and although they do not completely correct the problem, are able to make the roads safer for drivers and the people around them. We believe the introduction of our no-hassle Travel Mount is a product that that can help many drivers focus on the road. Hands-Free laws are beginning to sweep the nation, such as the one recently enacted in Washington D.C. barring cell phone users from driving and talking at the same time, unless they use an earpiece and microphone or some other form of hands-free technology. These laws will re-define the way people drive and talk on their cell phone, yet sometimes it might be for the worst. After all, what good is your hands-free device like your cell phone or PDA when it's on the floor of your car?

The Travel Mount hopes to eliminate the new problem of where to put your device once you are using hands-free technology. It conveniently clamps onto your vent blade via an alligator clip with ease and never requires any adhesive, meaning you can move it from car to car within minutes.
