

Reputable Car Donation Charity Programs Researched at Donate-Things.Org

This release highlights the creation of <http://donate-things.org/car> and informs readers about the comprehensive directory of car donation centers. It also highlights the reasons why donators should go directly through the centers rather than through an intermediary. The benefits to society as well as to the donator are also identified.

(PRWEB) November 10, 2004 -- DonateThings.Org, a company based in the US, is hoping to raise awareness about car donations, and make donating vehicles far easier for those that wish to improve the lives of those less fortunate.

The company has created a website, <http://donate-things.org/car>, which provides access to a comprehensive listing of reputable US car donation centers. By donating their used cars to these centers, US residents can help to save lives, improve lifestyles and save themselves the money and time associated with trying to sell their vehicles.

“Some of the intermediary agencies that offer to handle car donations for American residents end up keeping up to ninety percent of the vehicle’s value themselves,” said Philip Michaels, CEO of DonateThings.Org. “By going directly to the donation centers listed on our directory, donators can cut out the middle man and ensure that all of the vehicle’s value goes to a worthy cause.”

The website contains some valuable information for those looking to donate their vehicles, and makes it far easier for people to contact the donation centers directly rather than letting an intermediary company take a hefty cut of the vehicle’s value.

By donating a vehicle, Americans are able to assist many worthy causes such as helping with medical treatment, finding shelter for the homeless, and raising funds to feed the starving. At the same time, donators can cut out the cost of advertising their vehicle for sale, and can still claim the fair value of the vehicle by means of a tax rebate.

Car donating has become a popular way for Americans to make a real difference to the lives of others, while saving themselves time and money. The value of the vehicle is fully tax deductible and even towing of the vehicle is usually free and will be arranged by the donation center.
