

New Internet Site Monitors Local Road Rage Conditions

MonkeyMeter.com rates road rage conditions for your local area based on the previous visitors input for that day.

San Jose, CA (PRWEB) December 17, 2004 -- Experienced drivers know that some days are worse than others on the road. Some days everyone just seems to cut you off. Is it you, or is the Monkey Meter on "Extreme Danger" level?

MonkeyMeter.com rates the current traffic conditions based on the level of road rage from the previous visitors input. When first visiting the site, the national average is displayed. At that time you may either: see the current rating for a city of your choice, input your own road rage rating for your past driving experience, or see the recent activity from the other users. The site is simple to use, quick, and no membership required.

The site also offers free content for webmasters. By simply pasting a small amount of code on their site they are able to display the local road rage conditions for their area.

In less than one minute you can visit MonkeyMeter.com, see what the average is for the country and your city, and rate your commute to work. Here is the actual url: <http://www.monkeymeter.com>

###

Contact Information

Robert Campbell

BEST WEB IMAGE

<http://www.monkeymeter.com>

408-390-3128

Online Web 2.0 Version

You can read the online version of this press release here.