Policyholders that file a claim, expect that their insurance providers will reimburse the costs of sustained damages after they were involved in a car accident. When filing a claim, policyholders have to follow certain steps.

Depending on the guilty party, and the damage suffered, the insurance company will be able to provide coverage. In most cases, the same steps apply:

- Contact the authorities. It's important for drivers to call the police as soon as possible after the accident happened or when the owner realized his car got stolen. The police will create a report where they will gather evidence and eyewitness reports. Drivers should make sure to get a copy of that report.
- Get in touch with the DMV to notify the accident. After they are informed about the accident, they will inform the drivers about their legal responsibilities.
- Drivers should obtain all the info related to their accident. It's important to gather witness testimonials, police reports, and car repair bills.
- Notify the insurance company. Drivers should explain to their insurers how the accident happened and what are the damages.
- The insurance company will send a claim adjuster. Claim adjusters are trained professionals that work for the insurance company and they will try to obtain the lowest settlements possible.
- Cooperate with claim adjusters. The adjuster will contact the policyholder and ask him to describe how everything happened. The adjuster will check the car and review the repair costs. Drivers should carefully negotiate with claim adjusters and make sure they get a fair settlement.
